Dated: Sep 30, 2009

Pascack Hills High School joined forces with Millennium Visual Systems to create a real-time information display positioned at the entrance to Pascack Hills High School's recently renovated campus.

Pascack Hills High School, one of the top 15 public schools in New Jersey, joined forces with Millennium Visual Systems, one of the top LED sign designers and producers in the United States, to create a real-time information display positioned at the entrance to Pascack Hills High School's recently renovated campus.

This LED electronic display creates an attention-grabbing, energy efficient and worry-free way to keep current messages front and center for students, parents, teachers and community members. This sign will be used to display time-sensitive information about school events and the school's athletic program. When necessary, it will also be used to display amber alerts and other emergency messages. The weather will no longer inhibit the school from posting up-to-date information, as it did with the old letter display that was replaced. Around the clock, their highly visible and vibrant messages can be spotted from one of the busiest intersections in Montvale, NJ

Sarah Van Gunten, Pascack Hills High School Principal, expressed her enthusiasm for the newly installed sign saying, "We are happy to have such a visible means of communicating with parents, students, and the community at large" While, Jeff Schneider, the President of the Parent-Teacher Organization (PTO) which donated the display to the school, adds, "We have had great feedback from the community and we are so pleased with the results."
